

International Foreign Bribery Taskforce

Indicators of Foreign Bribery

The International Foreign Bribery Taskforce (IFBT) is made up of the Australian Federal Police, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, New Zealand Police, New Zealand Serious Fraud Office, United Kingdom Serious Fraud Office, National Crime Agency (UK) and the United States (US) Federal Bureau of Investigations.

The IGBT brings together foreign bribery specialists to share intelligence, knowledge, skills, methodologies and case studies in international bribery investigations.

This document summarises some key indicators associated with foreign bribery. The indicators have been collated based on the collective experiences of IGBT members.

The IGBT is publishing this document to enable persons working in high-risk sectors, as well as the broader public, to recognise possible instances of foreign bribery and report these concerns accordingly.

The indicators

The indicators of foreign bribery are not stand-alone and work in conjunction with each other. This document presents indicators relevant to individuals and companies that have elevated risk profiles for engagement in international corrupt practices. Some of the indicators are common to other financial crimes, including money laundering.

Taken in isolation the indicators do not automatically equate to criminal activity. Instead, they highlight factors which, when considered in combination and within context, raise the risk profile suggesting further evaluation or assessment is warranted. Further assessment of individuals or companies with an increased risk profile may demonstrate that conduct has moved beyond legitimate business or financial practices.

What we would like you to do

Glossary

Politically Exposed Person (PEP) – an individual entrusted with prominent public functions. This can include government officials, military officers, judges and high-ranking executives of state-owned enterprises.

Third party agencies – an independent organisation that provides services or performs tasks for a primary organisation, acting as an intermediary between the primary party and another party, or between two primary parties in a transaction. This could include consultants, corporate service providers, industry agents etc

Shell companies – a business that legally exists but has no active business operations, employees, or significant assets, essentially being a “shell” with little substance. While they have legitimate uses, such as holding assets, protecting intellectual property, or facilitating corporate transactions for startups, they are also frequently associated with illegal activities like money laundering, tax evasion, and hiding beneficial ownership due to their ability to obscure financial dealings.

Citizenship or visa by investment – migration programs where applicants can apply for residency or citizenship to a country via significant financial investment. Also referred to as Golden Visa or Golden Passport provision.

Net export country – sells more goods and services to other nations than it buys from them, resulting in a trade surplus.

Complex company structures – involves multiple legal entities, ownership layers, and jurisdictions, often designed to limit liability, optimize taxes, or segment operations. These structures typically feature a parent or holding company with numerous subsidiaries or affiliated entities, creating intricate relationships that can facilitate international expansion, asset protection, or easier succession planning. While they offer strategic advantages, complex structures also increase operational costs, legal obligations, and the difficulty of identifying ultimate beneficial owners.
